

Hoquarton Historical Interpretive Center - This lovely turn-of-the-nineteenth century house, believed to be the oldest in Tillamook, has been owned by many families. It is now in the process of being upgraded and renovated, with future plans including interpretive displays and science rooms for classes.

Originally, Tillamook was known as Hoquarton (from the Tillamook Native American language.) The Tillamooks fished in and near the slough. After white settlers came, the Hoquarton became the major waterway for commerce, boats docking along the slough, unloading foods, supplies and mail - even a car - and transporting cheese on the journey back. Until the Hwy 101 bridge was constructed in 1931, the only way to get to Rosenberg's was by boat.

C.B. Hadley House

C.B. Hadley built this home in 1905. It remained in the family until 1977, when a couple purchased it and created the Hadley House Restaurant. Today it is the La Mexicana Restaurant. Mr. Hadley owned the Grand Central Saloon & Billiard Parlor. Located on Stillwell Avenue, the saloon was one of the best appointed and thoroughly equipped establishments of its kind in the state in 1892, boasting electric lighting.

Captain Groat House - 2312 3rd St. John Groat left Wick, Scotland, at age 15. He later became a sailor. While on a trip to New Zealand, an earthquake occurred on the island where they were to pick up cargo for England, so they picked up sugar for Portland. Arriving in Astoria in 1881, he took a fancy to the area, decided to stay and took out his first papers in 1882. Prior to his transfer to Tillamook, Captain Groat served with the Army Corps of Engineers in Portland as captain of the survey boat "General Wright." In 1903, he became Tillamook's resident engineer. The captain and his wife Lillian had one child, Eugenia, who died in the flu epidemic of 1917-18. Two nieces from Scotland were adopted and brought to Tillamook in 1914. Niece Emma was a beloved teacher in Tillamook for years.

2303 - Italianate architecture with turrets, now apartments. In the 1940s and 50s occupied by "The Candy Lady," a little old lady who handed out candy to the local "gang of kids" every Friday morning, gaining their undying loyalty and unspoken agreement to leave her garden alone.

Goodspeed House 2502 - Built in 1890, Henry and Eli Goodspeed took out a building loan for this $3,000 home, intended to be the showplace of Tillamook. Into the 1970s, Goodspeed descendants still held the original deed to the land signed by President U.S. Grant. The staircase was shipped around Cape Horn.

Henry Crenshaw House 2315 - built in 1903, by Henry Crenshaw. Mr. Crenshaw was an electrician for the light plant, a stage coach driver, owner of a hardware/bicycle store, sheriff and Judge for Tillamook County. His wife Lulu was a charter member of the Shakespeare Club (begun in 1904 and still going). The yard at one time boasted maple trees 36 inches in diameter.

Haberlach House - 2406 Third St. This grand home was built in 1925 for the Carl Haberlach family. Mr. Haberlach, an excellent salesman, was responsible for forming the first cooperative of ten cheese factories in 1909, thereby forming the Tillamook County Creamery Association; pushing for consistent quality standards and getting the award-winning Tillamook Cheeses known far and wide.

Mrs. Haberlach is fondly remembered for her maple cakes with maple frosting. Today the house is home to the law office of John Tuthill.

George Winslow House - 2415 Third St. George Winslow, Sr., a well-known trial and appellate attorney and state representative in the House from 1925 to 1936, as well as a state senator from 1945-47, was the main mover behind legislation to rseed the Tillamook Burn. This lovely home was built in 1924, "the consideration for this was $5,535.00." George's son explained

A.G. Beals Home - 2316 3rd St. Arthur Generous Beals, age 18, headed West from Pennsylvania in February of 1891, with his brother Fred. Later he married a Pennsylvania girl, Grace L. Allen, and brought her and his mother back to Tillamook. Arthur ended up developing 12 dairy farms; operating five sawmills; operating the Tillamook City electric light system for several years; serving in the state legislature, sitting on the "Board of High Curricula" for
